THE VERB TO GO AND ITS PREFIXED VERBS IN SERBIAN AND SLOVENIAN LANGUAGE IN BORISLAV PEKIĆ'S NOVEL RABIES

In this paper we observe the verb to go, as one of the most typical verbs of human motion, and verbs derived by adding a prefix to this verb (for example verbs to leave, to come, to cross). We observe the verbs in Serbian and Slovenian language in the novel Rabies written by Borislav Pekić. The whole purpose of research is pointing out the similarities and differences in the use and meaning of these verbs in both languages. The verb to go is observed in its basic meaning of human motion in upright position, with the use of one's own limbs. Here we especially discuss the verbs with prefixes, that can be used to express different types of direction in Serbian and Slovenian language (for example prefix do- is very frequent in Serbian, while in Slovenian is very rare and archaic). Besides prefixes, we observe the constructions that can also be used to express direction of movement.

Keywords: verbs of movement, direction, prefixes, spatial construction, Rabies

VERBS WITH PREFIXES ВЫ-, ПО-, ПРИ- AND ПРО- IN RUSSIAN COMPARED TO SERBIAN LANGUAGE

In this paper we observe verbs with prefixes в-, по-, при-, про-, in the Russian language, as well as their translation equivalents in the Serbian language. The verbs will be divided and processed into four sub-headings based on criteria such as: direction of a movement, beginning of an action and reaching a certain place. The paper is based on the novel Tihi Don I, written by Mihailo Sokolov and published in both languages. The aim of the paper is to present the meanings and uses of chosen verbs in Serbian and Russian language. We will point to the semantic components that condition the equivalence of the verbs in these two languages, as well as to the syntax elements that determine the movement and direction. As the prefix introduces a change in the verbal form, we will specifically observe the perfect and imperfect verbs. The research will show which verbs appear as the most typical and the most frequent and how much context affects their meaning. We will emphasize how many equivalents in the second language have those verbs in our examples, taking into account the changes in the meaning which occur during the translation.

Keywords: prefix verbs, verbs, prefixes, verbs in Russian.

ASPECTUAL MARKERS IN RUSSIAN AND SERBIAN: PREFIXES PRO-, PRE- AND PRI-

The paper observes the meanings of prefixes pro-, pre- and pri- in Russian and Serbian and their influence on the classification of the verbs, i. e. the results of such classification – verbs belonging to different aspectual subclasses. The context is as important as the semantics of the verbs and the semantics of a certain prefix are, because of the prefixal polysemy. It indicates that many action verb subclasses in Russian and Serbian can be formed using the same prefixes: comitative (pro-, pri-), perdurative (pre-, pro-), delimitative (pri-, pro-), etc. The aim of this paper is to examine lexical, semantic and aspectual potential of the prefixes pro-, pre- and pri- in Russian and Serbian. The analysis is based on the corpus consisting of Russian and Serbian dictionaries, while examples of concrete usage of the verb lexemes were excerpted from various internet resources and/or novels written in Russian and Serbian.

Keywords: prefixes pro-, pre- and pri-, verb subclasses, Russian, Serbian
